Fortunata has a difficult life, an eight years old daughter and a failed marriage behind her. She works as a hairdresser in people's houses, crossing the city of Rome, from the outskirts to the houses of the well-off to do women's hair. Fortunata fights every day with determination to achieve her dream: opening her own salon and challenging fate, in the attempt of emancipating herself, gaining her independence and the right to some happiness. She knows that, to achieve her dreams she has to be firm: she has thought of everything, she is ready for anything, but she had not considered the unpredictable coming of love, the one subversive force capable of sweeping aside every certainty. Also because, perhaps for the first time, someone truly loves her for the woman she is.
