How true to ourselves are we when we are among other people, how contrived, how artificial when we go to work or when we go on a first date? And how natural are we when we are with our friends or family?

The answer is easy: we often play a role in different situations. 2 of a Kind explores the theme of the double: the different personality each of us shows to the outer world compared to how we really feel inside. Hence each character is played by two actors with distinctly different physical traits who represent the different masks people wear in private and in social situations.
