Quentin Tarantino, here in the extraordinary role of narrator, explains us why Sergio Corbucci is "the second best director of Italian westerns", as stated by one of his character in his latest film Once upon a time in Hollywood, and as confirmed by his choice to shoot Django Unchained using a Corbucci movie from the 1960s as inspiration. Unpublished original materials, testimonies such as Franco Nero (Corbucci's favorite actor) and Ruggero Deodato (Django's assistant director) and footage from the original films combine in the documentary to relive a unique era in Italian cinema.
