Switzerland: in the winter of 1939, Lubo, a young Jenisch (nomadic ethnicity), is called to serve in the Swiss army to defend the border with Austria from the imminent threat of the WWII. His cousin manages to reach him and tells him that the gendarmes took his children and his wife was killed in the scuffle. They took them away because they are children of wanderers, gypsies and need to follow the national re-education program created by the Kinder der Landstrasse, a pro-government organization influenced by eugenics theories prevalent in Europe in the 30's. Lubo defects and decides to search for his children by carrying out an act of revenge with unpredictable consequences, forcing us to rethink the blurred boundaries between good and evil.
